RESTITUTION

As a school, our staff believe in a restitution approach to discipline. This is based on the recognition that young people will make mistakes. There is a focus on positive solutions to fix their mistakes. Students learn more effective behaviours and follow the framework of our school beliefs.

Orange Shirt Day

www.orangeshirtday.org

Phyllis Webstad first told her story about her experiences at residential school at an event in Williams Lake, B.C. in 2013. People who heard her speak were deeply moved – and the idea of Orange Shirt Day was born.

September 30 was chosen as the date because September is when Aboriginal children were taken from their families to attend residential schools.

The day honours the tens of thousands of residential school Survivors. It acknowledges the painful experiences they had at the schools. It also provides an opportunity for people to talk about the schools' impact.

Today, Phyllis' orange shirt symbolizes what Indigenous students, families, and communities lost because of residential schools. Time with family. Parental care. A sense of self-worth and well-being. Language and culture. Freedom.

When people choose to wear an orange shirt on Orange Shirt Day, they are sending the message that "every child matters."
